Sometimes, a mistake is just a mistake

I used to get blamed all the time for just stuff Bob Stombek said. If I did, it wasn't always his fault — sometimes it was credit where it didn't belong. Especially if I thought that it was not he who had written a certain item. Robert L. Steinback was, as I said on EAT at the time, a reporter at the Miami Herald and we shared a corner stall in the oldest building. It was the old yellow building, both of us boarded, bald and thin. That said, we really didn't look a lot alike. For one thing, I wear glasses and he doesn't. I also am much longer.

But it isn't always. And maybe it isn't always my fault either. Or maybe it is, if you take a look at the world, in one era of instant affluence and one era of instant recession, for the possibility that occasionally, what looks like a mistake is just a human being, being human.

And I guarantee you, if you disagree, you know what to do. Blame Bob Stombek.

Sometimes, a mistake is just a mistake.
